ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Some of these poems have previously appeared in the following magazines and websites: Shadowtrain, Stride, Tears in the Fence.

Many thanks are due to Anthony Caleshu and Tony Lopez for encouraging me to undertake the MA in Creative Writing at the University of Plymouth. Thanks are also due to members of The Language Club who have provided feedback, encouragement and friendship over a long period, particularly Tim Allen, Norman Jope, Kenny Knight and Philip Kuhn. I'm also indebted to Damaris Barber for friendship, feedback and encouragement without which I may well have given up.

Voices of the dead

Knowing how to feel is more important than what you feel. This surely depends less on the robots than on the quality of the humans who design them. Should beauty be painted with her head in the clouds? She still has occasional mood swings but they're nowhere near as severe. From the water everything looks different yet most learning happens casually and without programmed instruction. A system of uncertainty has entered our daily lives. Pollack like a slow-moving bait and for that reason the action of your rubber eel is important. As mutinies go this is a very laid-back affair. Some scientists say that our planet is running out of platinum. This may or may not be true but every cloud has its moment in the sun. During the manic phase there can be feelings of inflated self-esteem verging on grandiosity. Do you have the ability to spot the next big thing?

Memoirs of a tour manager

Give me a vision of the future. Once again it is the rod that does most of the work. A new, or at least more confident, do-it-yourself politics flourished out of necessity. Have you ever come across a storm-surge? Purnell Roberts is dead. It's difficult to control or anticipate what a robot might learn on the battlefield. Yet schooling is imposed on all citizens for between ten and eighteen years. As an actor he wished always to be detached from the part he was playing. Are you a wild swimmer? Everything swirled about him like a cloud yet people with mild mania are often witty and inventive. Was the war legal or not? All candidates are required to complete section 2B of the application form. When there is a crisis we will deal with the crisis. It could be said that we all employ some form of camouflage yet astronomers are waking up to brilliant, celestial views. Like all small children he was fascinated by the typewriter.
